(Rin's RVR is G2 to D4 while Len's E2 to G-3) Tbh Kagamen twins were the first Vocaloids to bring me to Vocaloid and seeing them grow up these past years have made me very happy :D. (I have a boundary between the Rin/Len faction and the Miku faction with the problem of having too little Rin/Len tracks compared) here's a demo video written on Hatsune Miku Ch in YT, Tokyo Zombieland by Fantastic★OPPORTUNITY! I can't wait to see what songwriters can pull off with these new audio banks! Are you crazy about this with me? Kagamine Rin/Len V4 English Kagamine Rin/Len V4 English are English vocaloids created for the V4 editor by Crypton Future Media, Inc. As the name says, they are English versions of Rin and Len. No sound produces the same results as Japanese voices. Both have notoriety Japanese accents. Both have GWL sound, but they can't do XSY with each other. Kagamen Reign V4 is a feminine voice with a vibrant and natural pronunciation. Compared to Len, it is sharper and less cushioned. This maintains the specific timbre that Rin has with stable performance on both low and high notes. He lacks the power of his Japanese voice. It sounds much softer than the original Japanese tune, so there's no match in the Japanese pack. The closest tone of the appendix is hot, but the difference between ranges and tempos will continue to produce an obvious change when language changes. Kagamen Len V4 English: It's a humble, young man's voice, with natural pronunciation. Provides a voice that covers the role of a younger man. He is more overwhelmed and uncertain compared to Rinne. He lacks the power of his Japanese voice. Because Len's voice provider is female, the sound in represents a female vocal range down like YANHE or Gachapoid. This problem even affects Japanese voices. However, this sound suffers from almost no Timbre in the sound that makes it look very feminine compared to the Japanese sound. According to many users, the main problem with their voice is that some son casi idénticas a Luka V4 Straight.
